

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

My name is Frederick Albrink and I have a small business in the Louisville, KY, area. I have been able to use one of our small internet service providers, Iglou, which has enabled me to have affordable internet access for the past several years. Iglou, along with other small ISPs, is in danger of going out of business if they cannot compete in the DSL marketplace. Because I value the price competition which an open market provides as well as getting Internet access from an independent Internet service provider like IgLou, it is important to me to have the choice to purchase broadband DSL from an independent ISP. Please do not make changes to federal regulations that would prevent IgLou and other independent ISPs from being able to deploy DSL and provide me with broadband Internet access.

Sincerely,

Frederick H. Albrink
